Introducing Ourselves

KAN Festival Poland

Jugend Medien Festival Berlin

Hello.

If you're not sure why this is in your inbox, it's there because we (Emie and Alari) have sent this to everyone we can think of. If you don't want to see any more of these, there's a link to unsubscribe at the bottom. So - in case you didn't know, we've set up a company.

This is it.

And this is our first newsletter.

We've also got a website - www.happyendingsproductions.co.uk - but we're still building it, so in the meantime, feel free to drop in on our myspace. The website should be up and running in the next couple of weeks, so keep an eye on it. We could probably use someone telling us whether it works ok.

KAN Festival Poland.

Some of you know this already, but it's worth mentioning twice: Recognize Myself is off to Poland in a couple of weeks time to compete in the "Best Foreign Movie" category at the 8th KAN festival in Wroclaw, Poland. The festival runs from Thursday 19th to Sunday 22nd April, and the film's showing on the 19th, in the 7PM session. If anyone happens to be in Poland or nearby around this time, do try and drop in. The screenings are at the cinema "Warsawa", on Ul. Piludskiego (Number 64a). Hopefully the film will win something, or at least make a few people cry.

We must be moving up in the world slightly, since we'll be staying in a hotel for once rather than on somebody's floor (thanks for Manchester, Paul!).

Visit the festival site here if you like.

Jugend Medien Festival Berlin.

We're also taking Recognize Myself to Berlin in May, if we can find the venue where we're supposed to be showing it. It's just off Martin-Luther-Strasse, so if anyone knows where that is, we'd love to know, since the map they've given us shows a distance of about two blocks around the cinema. As you might have guessed from the heading up there, the festival's called Jugend Medien Festival. The film's showing on Thursday 10th May, the festival's from the 9th to the 13th.

For anyone in the area, we're looking for a sofa and the venue's called "Kulturzentrum 'Die Weisse Rose'". Sadly, hotels in Berlin are a little more expensive than Poland. Flights, though, are cheap - we got ours for a penny each plus taxes - so if you've got a spare couple of days, do pop over and see us there.

The festival also has a workshop about filming with juvenile delinquents, which might come in handy in future. The film's in competition here as well, though the two aren't connected. The website is here.

In other news

Emie's documentary "A Trail of Pictures" showed at the Roxy Bar and Screen on Borough High St on Wednesday - thanks to anyone who came. Thanks also to Charlie (Fourdocs) for putting the night on and having us.

That's all for now - thanks for reading, and until next time, bye. If you've got anything you'd like us to mention, let us know and we'll try and put it into the next newsletter, if we can.
